What Changed in January?

January was a reasonable month for equity markets as investors initially gained comfort when President Trump did not follow through on his promise to impose tariffs on his first day in office (20th January). This helped boost European shares which outperformed the US given the greater impact of tariffs on European companies. Bond yields and currencies were little changed over the month as economic data and central bank decisions contained few surprises.

- In currency-hedged terms, developed market equities (MSCI World ex-Australia) returned 3.5% in January. The US equity market (S&P 500) was up 2.8% and Australian shares (S&P/ASX 200) gained 4.6%. European shares (STOXX 600) rose 6.4% and emerging market shares (MSCI Emerging Markets) rose 1.6%.
- 10-year government bond yields declined 3 basis points (bps) in the US, 4bps in Australia, 3bps in the UK while they rose 10bps in Germany and 16bps in Japan.
- Investment-grade corporate bond spreads in the US were steady at 82bps over US treasuries, while US high yield bond spreads fell by 24bps to 268bps.
- The Australian Dollar rose 0.5 US cents to US$0.6238.
- Oil prices fell 0.6% to US$72.84 per barrel (WTI). Gold rose 7.6% to US$2,812 per troy ounce. Iron ore prices rose 4.6% to US$105.78 per tonne.
